A TRIP TO THE POLE

A circle of admiring friends had gathered to extend greeting and fond good byes to the great explorer, Perry Cat and his companion Doc. Cat. Perry tells the people that he will find the North Pole if there is one.

They then mount there private Shenandoah and fly away. Many interesting experiences are met with. They see the platful bears coasting, the great dances of the seal lovers and the gym class of the north wood bears.

They finally are forced to land right near an upright pole. Perry shouts "Eureka" and throws a lass^o around the stripped pole, then drags it away.

They return home amid great cheer. They tell the crowd that they have brought the pole. Then suddenly the pole comes to life and resembles a Dinasour and drags the Shenandoah with it. It illustrates the moral: "One Tale Is Good Until Another is Told."
